

American Wood Protection Association

Protecting Wood Since 1904

Membership

- AWPA represents the full interest of the industry, including lumber, poles, piles, and engineered wood products; and oilborne treatments, waterborne, and surface applications.
- Members come from general interest groups, academia, chemical producers, treated wood producers, inspection agencies, users, equipment providers, and more.

Why should I join AWPA?

- Active involvement in development of treatment and inspection standards, resulting in longer service life for wood products.
- Valued peer contacts in industry while sharing interests and issues in the wood preserving industry.

Meetings

- The AWPA organizes annual meetings for the general membership each Spring, and technical committee meetings in the Fall.
- AWPA members receive substantially reduced registration fees for these meetings.

Publications

- Each year, AWPA publishes its Proceedings which cover presentations made at the Annual Meeting. AWPA members in good standing have online access to the Proceedings in the password-protected member pages of the AWPA website.
- AWPA also publishes its annual Book of Standards each year, and this publication is available to members at deeply discounted rates.

Members Only Website

- AWPA Members may log in to view committee meeting minutes and annual reports, a complete member directory, papers presented at the AWPA annual meetings, and other members-only information — a feature not offered to the general public.
